RESEARCH GRANT SUPPORT

NIMH 1K23MH128582-01

2022-2026

Project Title: Mapping Interventions to Reduce Mental Health Services Disparities among Transgender and Nonbinary Adults

Role: Principal Investigator

PI: Aaron Samuel Breslow, PhD; Albert Einstein College of Medicine

Description: This project aims to measure and mitigate disparities in mental health services affecting transgender and nonbinary populations. In particular, the study will analyze longitudinal trends in services disparities between a large, Bronx, NY sample of transgender and nonbinary people (n=9,698) and a 1:5 match non-transgender cohort (n=48,490). The goal of the project is to map integrate quantitative and qualitative data to map interventions for system-level changes to transgender-affirming mental healthcare.

NIAID 5P30AI124414-05

2021-2022

Project Title: e-SMART/EST Telehealth Intervention to Reduce Depression in Older Women with HIV, Center for AIDS Research Sub-Award

Role: Principal Investigator

PI: Aaron Samuel Breslow, PhD; Albert Einstein College of Medicine

Description: The goal of this project is to adapt an evidence-based, enhanced cognitive-behavioral stress management intervention (CSBM+) to target depression among older HIV+ women in the Bronx, NY. The intervention, "Stress Management and Relaxation Training/Expressive Supportive Therapy" (SMART/EST), has proven effectiveness in numerous iterations over 15+ years, including trials with racially diverse HIV+ women. To meet changing community needs, including enhancing behavioral interventions via telehealth, we will pilot test e-SMART/EST, a teletherapy adaptation with peer support for HIV+ older women.

NIMH R21MH121920

2021-Present

Project Title: Positive and Negative Valence Systems Underlying Suicide in Youth

Role: Co-Investigator

PI: Vilma Gabbay, MD, Albert Einstein College of Medicine

Description: Suicide is a major public health concern in adolescents and the second leading cause of death in this age group. We will study 30 suicidal and 30 non-suicidal depressed adolescents, ages 12-17. All will have comprehensive clinical evaluations (diagnoses, behavioral measures, computerized reward task). Neuroimaging studies will include structural MRI, resting-state and task fMRI (RFT, RPET, thermal pain). Machine learning algorithms will be used to examine which processes predict suicidal behavior.

NIMH R01MH126821

2021-Present

Project Title: A Multimodal Parent-focused Intervention for Vulnerable Populations in the Bronx

Role: Co-Investigator

PI: Vilma Gabbay, MD, Albert Einstein College of Medicine

Description: This study is a parent-focused mentalizing intervention with a smartphone health platform in vulnerable populations in the Bronx. The Bronx has been hit disproportionately by the COVID-19 pandemic. Addressing these challenges, we propose a multimodal study tackling both parental vulnerability and healthcare access building on our 12-session therapeutic CARE program for parents of children in treatment in a community psychiatry clinic in our health system.

NIH R01DA034661

2010-2013

Project Title: Multicomponent Intervention to Reduce Sexual Risk and Substance Use

Role: Project Manager

PI: Jeffrey Parson, PhD; City University of New York.

Description: The goal of this study was to evaluate the efficacy of a peer-led innovative and scalable 7-session hybrid individual- and group-based HIV risk reduction intervention, based on Motivational Interviewing and Cognitive-Behavioral Skills Training with transgender women in New York City. This study was the first of its kind to evaluate the efficacy of a peer-led group intervention tailored for transgender women. Results were utilized to be scaled and replicated across mental health settings.

NIH R01-MH087714

2010-2013

Project Title: Compulsive Behaviors, Mental Health, & HIV Risk

Role: Project Manager

PI: Jeffrey Parson, PhD; City University of New York.

Description: The goal of this study was to measure the impact of sexual compulsivity (i.e., behaviors that increase in frequency and intensity so as to interfere with personal, interpersonal, or vocational pursuits) on HIV risk behavior among highly sexually active men who have sex with men in New York City. The study utilized respondent-driven sampling to recruit and follow 400 men longitudinally for 13 months, with the aim of capturing the impact of neurocognitive deficits, experienced stigma and abuse, resilience, and event-level triggers on HIV risk behavior.

NIH SC2-AI090923

2010-2013

Project Title: HIV Risk and Venues for Meeting Sex Partners

Role: Project Manager

PI: Christian Grov, PhD, City University of New York.

The goal of this longitudinal study was to utilize probability-based recruitment methods to identify and longitudinally follow (for 6 months) three diverse samples of sexually active MSM (N = 150): one sample recruited via public sex venues (n = 50), one recruited at bars (n = 50), and one recruited off the Internet (n = 50). This study tracked changes in participants' sexual behaviors, substance use behaviors, and venue frequenting to identify connections between venue-specific partners and subsequent sexual behaviors, HIV-risk, drug, and alcohol use. Data informed venue-based HIV prevention and intervention efforts, and treatments designed to reduce MSM's HIV associated risk behaviors.

NIH R21-DA026792

2010-2013

Project Title: Decisions about Risk Taking

Role: Project Manager

PI: Sarit Golub, City University of New York.

The goal of this study was to understand the decision-making processes of young men who have sex with men (18-29) who were at high risk for HIV. The study aimed to assess underlying behavioral, emotional, and neurocognitive mechanisms through which young men make decisions about condom use, HIV status disclosure, and pursuing health care services.

2010-2013

Project Title: Adherence, Counseling, & Education

Role: Project Manager

PI: Jeffrey Parson, PhD; City University of New York.

The goal of this randomized control trial was to measure the acceptability and efficacy of a mindfulness-based stress reduction intervention with older adults (55+) living with HIV/AIDS.
